Kangaroo rats: Ecosystem engineers on western rangelands

William S. Longland\textsuperscript{a}, Josephina D. Smithers\textsuperscript{b1}, and Lindsay A. Dimitri\textsuperscript{a,}\textsuperscript{*}

\textsuperscript{a}USDA, Agricultural Research Service, Great Basin Rangeland Research Unit, 920 Valley Road, Reno, Nevada, USA
\textsuperscript{b}Department of Fish and Wildlife Sciences, University of Idaho, 875 Perimeter Drive MS-1136, Moscow, Idaho, USA

*Corresponding author: USDA, Agricultural Research Service, Great Basin Rangeland Research Unit, 920 Valley Road, Reno, NV 89512, USA, lindsay.dimitri@usda.gov

\textsuperscript{1}Present address: Department of Rangeland Ecology and Conservation, Montana State University, P.O. Box 172900, Bozeman, Montana

Declaration of competing interest

The authors declare the following financial interests/personal relationships which may be considered as potential competing interests. The authors certify that they have no financial interest in the subject matter discussed in the manuscript. W.S.L. and L.A.D. are employees of USDA Agricultural Research Service and were associated with management decisions regarding the topic of this manuscript. J.D.S. is a current SRM board member but was not involved in the review or decision process for this manuscript.

Keywords: desert rodents, Dipodomys, heteromyid rodents, keystone species, rangeland sustainability